Spring Journal Prompts

Here are some fun Spring writing Prompts to get those young minds working! There are different kinds of questions included designed to engage students in critical thinking. Your students will be asked to imagine, compare, and describe. Each page has several copies of the prompt. Print enough copies for your class. Then have students cut out a prompt and glue it into their journals or writing notebooks to write. I use these as a quick prep writing center. Enjoy!

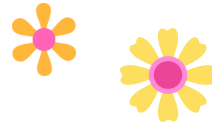

Describe:

One morning you look out the window. Now you know for sure that it is Spring. Describe how you know.

Think:

Spring is often thought of as a season of new beginnings. Why do you think Spring is described this way rather than any of the other seasons? (Hint: think about what happens during the Spring?)
